The Old Dominion

Virginia,
Historic Mother of our Land,
Shrine of Freedom-seekers,
Vision-strained and muscle-worn,
Thou hast felt their kisses pressed upon
thy virgin shores,
Thou has heard their prayers of Hope,
Their vows of Faithfulness,
That in their very falterings
Did bid a Nation rise.

Maker of Men!
We love thy noble sons and daughters,
And cherish dear their countless deeds which,
Great and small, each on each,
Have made our Nation grand.

Moulder of Lives!
Proud is our heritage of Love and Life
and Learning,
Sweet are thy accents of Duty and of Law;
Great to be native of the reaping slopes
and valleys,
Great to sing thy praises wrapped in harmony divine,
Yet, greater still, to mould a life, if but for thy forgetting,
To keep thy noble Trust,
To grasp thy Spirit true which leads
The March of Humankind.

—OLIVE SMITH BOWMAN.

To The Setting Sun

Bright, glowing disk, poised at the earthly rim,
To me you have become a coin of gold
Slow falling from my sight into the dim
Dark coffers of eternal time untold.

How lightly did I hold you all day through,
Forgetting you were minted near a Throne;
A tribute thither should I render you,
Whose mystic superscription is God's own.

—ANN JONES.

I.

MY DAYS ARE IDLED IN DREAMS

A dewy flower holds me,
Tints in the sky,
While a precious span of time
Breathes softly by.

My days are idled in dreams
Of heaven's hue—
While I might be creating
Something for you.

II.

ILLUMINED

(Suggested by Vision—MAY THIELGAARD WATTS, in The Literary Digest)

I wonder that they
Passed me unseen yesterday:

Hidden shiningness there—
Sungleams darkling on the stair;

Blooming bush that now
Brushed my cheek with fragrant bough;

Flight the robin made,
Trailing light through woodland shade—

I wonder that they
Passed . . . . Your letter came today.

III.

FRAGMENTS

In blue imbedded
Glitters a star—
One crystal splintered
From falling bar?

Within my medley
Whispers a soul—
One fragment splintered
From off the whole?

—ADRIENNE RICHARDS.

Killed in Action

His dust and the smoke of a battle-cloud
Met and mingled,
And drifted away together.
Black, powdery smoke and purple, moist blood-vapor
Interwove
Into a veil of mourning, tragic, dark,
That wildly fluttered heavenward in a wind
And wrapped itself in choking coils around
The pale, unsullied, heaving throats of clouds.
They wept.

A son of God, a lad of earth,
Who else had trailed a glowing destiny,
Was offered up by potentates
To hell.

—ANN JONES.

Logical Ending

As Mary gazed sadly down at the fraternity pin which she held in her hand she decided that she would never, never have anything else to do with another boy—especially a college freshman.

Of course, she was going to send the pin back. She didn't want to wear it anyhow, especially after what had just happened. No, she didn't mind sending it back, she was glad to be rid of it. Over and over Mary repeated these words, trying very hard to convince herself they were true.

But then as she looked at the pin all the incidents that were connected with it came back to her. She had been happy during the months she had worn the pin, and, of course, had been in love with the owner. Yes, Bobby was a nice boy, even if he was a freshman. It was hard not to regret, just a little, that it was all over.

Would life ever be quite the same? This thought came to Mary as she prepared to wrap up the pin. She had idealized Bobby; she had thought, just as every girl had since time began, that this was different; she and Bobby would not disagree as did so many of their friends. And then suddenly to have every happy dream of love and the future shattered! It was a terrible disillusionment, to say the least. Mary was quite sure she would never go out with another man.

Still she gazed at the pin. Meantime her roommates chided with such remarks as these, "Don't be silly, Mary; you are the dumbest ever, to waste a thought over that infant." Well, perhaps she was, but she comforted herself with the fact that she would never think about another boy.

As the phone rang, Mary continued to pack "his" letters, picture, and miscellaneous things in a box. She would send them the first thing in the morning, indeed she would. She would feel better after she had sent them, and she could settle down to a manless life. The phone continued to ring. No, she was not going to answer it. No one would call her up. Why should she be interested in the old phone?

"Oh, Mary, someone wishes to speak to you."

Well, of all the nerve, to intrude upon the last thoughts she was ever going to waste on a man.

As she went down the steps she repeated, "No, indeed, no one need ask me for a date; I've had my last one." But as she recognized the voice of Lloyd at the other end of the wire another thought came to her mind. Why shouldn't she go out with other boys? She would show Bobby that it was all the same to her, whatever it cost her to do it. And Lloyd was cute; she had always liked Lloyd. Of course she was never, never going to love anyone else,—but, she might as well give Lloyd a date.

—ALVA DRUMMOND.

$15.25

There it rested against a background of dull gold—inviting her, mocking her, thrilling her, now infuriating her with a bitterness against her lot and now saturating her very soul with the ineffable, inexplicable sweetness always stirred into being by a thing of beauty, whether it be man's greatest creation or God's lowliest. It had a wide, soft brim and snug-fitting crown of most delicate orchid, with an alluring tinted rose peeping over the side of it right into one's face. Lois could actually feel its petals caress her cheek as she eyed it hungrily. And the shade! It would bring out all the lovely pink and white transparency of her skin and every light and shadow of her glinting, golden hair. It would—why, it would—. At this point she jerked herself up sharply, pulled the cheap little collar of the cheap little coat closely up under her chin, and swung away from the window like a soldier bidding a loved one farewell at the call of arms. She too must answer the battle call of an unfeeling world. Hurriedly and fiercely she walked for about one block; then she stopped short, wheeled about, and ran back at an undignified "little-girl" pace. Again she faced the hat, and again her eyes were filled with despair as the cold, unfriendly price-tag stared her in the face and jeered its "$15.25" at her.

Lois clutched her pocketbook tightly. She had, by some ironical coincidence, exactly fifteen dollars, two dimes, and five pennies with one spare penny "for luck"! But the precious money was a whole week's salary, and there was the bill from the grocer, and the rent falling due in about a week, besides the thousand and one other expenses she somehow always incurred. But—Mr. Green would willingly let her run a monthly account, and the rent could wait a few days until mother's rich customers paid her for sewing night and day for them. Should she—? Lois's fingers fumbled with the catch of her purse. There it was—fifteen dollars and twenty-five cents, and one cent left "for luck"! And there, in front of her, beckoned "a dream of the poets"! She wavered, and true to the old adage, was lost. Fled was the sight of Mother's worn face and weary fingers, gone was every scruple and misgiving, and each prick of conscience was defiantly ignored. With the air of one about to view fairyland, she approached the door of the shop, and—entered.

She breathlessly announced her desire to the suave, smiling lady within, and waited, without stirring, while the latter went to the window to remove the hat. She was still staring ecstatically into space when the woman returned, empty handed, and with a voice full of diplomatic regret, explained that the hat had been sold, adding, of course, that they had others just as pretty.

That evening as Lois burst into the door of their little apartment, and gaily flung down a week's salary, her mother was the recipient of so much hugging and kissing that she decided that her daughter must have met with some great happiness, as indeed she had.

THE COMMON PROBLEM

*'The common problem, yours, mine, everyone's,
Is not to fancy what were fair in life,
Provided it could be—but finding first
What may be, find how to make it fair
Up to our means.'*

—ROBERT BROWNING.

Believing that the advanced students in our college can be a constructive force in the development of a greater Virginia and seeking a medium through which they may participate in effecting such an advancement, we have organized the Virginia Club which we dedicate to the best possible service of the State whose citizens we are.

Vanity Fair

And of the varied crowd that through these halls
Moves with ever changed effect
As of a huge kaleidoscope,
We now must show who represents each type,
That mirrored in these pages
You may find in every face
Limned the ideal of an apt attribute.

Turn then, these several leaves,
And may you be well pleased with them.
For they are there not by their own conceit,
Nor yet by caprice of Chance;
But forth from the number of her daughters,
To show the traits she admires,
Alma Mater sends these to you.

Limericks

McCorkle, our Chemistry teacher,
Is not the type of a preacher;
    Sure we love him, we'll say,
    Not "Annually," but each day;
As Sophomore Man he's a feature.

We have a professor named Bell,
Of evolution he likes to tell;
    Should his notes blow away,
    Not a word could he say,
For he reads from those notes very well.

Our teacher, Miss Blanche E. O. Graham,
Teaches us about germs—how to slay 'em;
    She coaches our team,
    It's the best ever seen,
Hats off to you, Blanche E. O. Graham!

We all love our Miss Jennie Tabb,
She never will fade—just like Fab;
    List of subjects not in?
    Oh, my, what a sin!
For Miss Jennie will surely you nab.

We have here a teacher named King,
She teaches us all how to sing;
    But if downward we bend,
    Before the "Amen,"
Our seats up again we must bring.

This teacher knows all about the world,
(Miss Grenels, beloved by each girl);
    With a map in each hand
    And six in the sand
She makes our brains with Geography whirl!

For a lengthy and tiresome duration,
Mr. Fattig can talk "conjugation";
    Starfishes and snails,
    Spirogyra and whales,
Will we know it when we reach maturation?

Mr. Coyner teaches parts of the brain,
For Intelligence Tests he can train;
    But does he study the "complexes"
    And note the "reflexes"
Of his Ford, when it's out in the rain?

VIRGINIAN RELIGS

Jokes

The Psychology tests that all Freshmen took after entrance were to determine which state institution they belong in.

College girls are a pretty good lot,
But they always take their ease;
And even when they graduate
They do it by degrees!

Mr. Bell: "Have you read Darwin's The Origin of the Species?"

E. Crute: "No, Sir, I haven't."

Mr. Bell (excitedly): "Well, you ought to. It will make a man of you!"

Dr. Walmsley: "An American M. D. has discovered a drug which, when administered, causes people to tell the truth. We understand that it is illegal to bring the stuff within three miles of a politician!!!"

"Quiet in this hall, girls,"
We often hear her say;
Who else, I ask you, could it be,
But dear Miss Maudie K.!

Fairy Tale: Once upon a time an S. T. C. girl went to Hampden-Sidney "Mid-winters" and refused to talk about it.

"Runt" says she has written home so many times for money for the college annual that she'll have to tell Dad it comes out in volumes.

Bun: "Dix, stick your NOSE out of the door and SEE if you can HEAR anyone TALKING."

Eleanor: "Why did you get kicked out of the Glee Club?"
Lucy Haile: "Oh, I had no voice in the matter."

————— "Aren't you wearing my 'frat' pin? Where is it?"
Kitty Reid: "Don't ask embarrassing questions!"

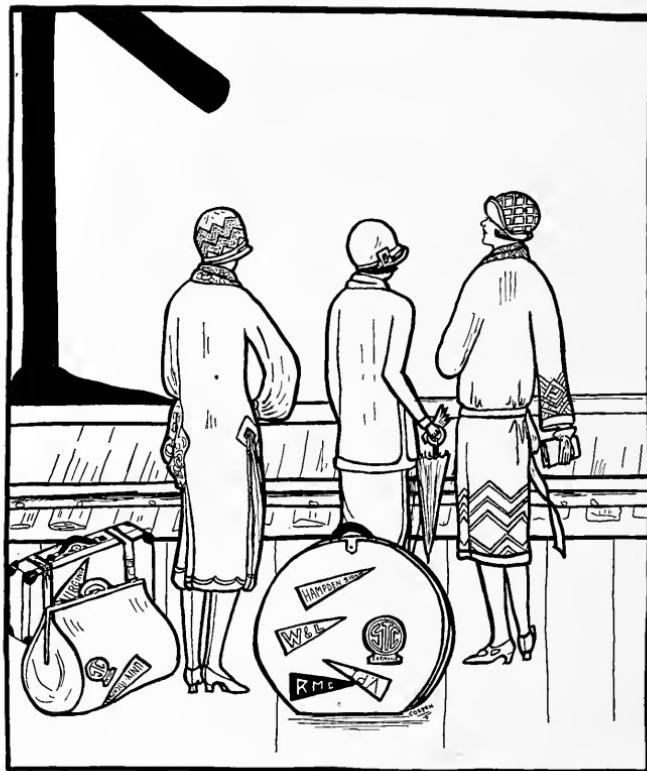

"Do fishes smell?" inquired Mr. Fattig in Zoology.
"Does Standard Oil?" asked we in agony.

Peggy Walton: "Miss Tucker, who was the smallest man in History?"
Miss Tucker: "Why—er—ah—I'm not so sure—"
Peggy: "A Roman soldier who went to sleep on his watch."

Virginia Robertson in Education 4: "Why, Mr. Coyner, I thought only geniuses could die of Bright's Disease."
